5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MATT JUUL, BOSTON FEATURES EDITOR

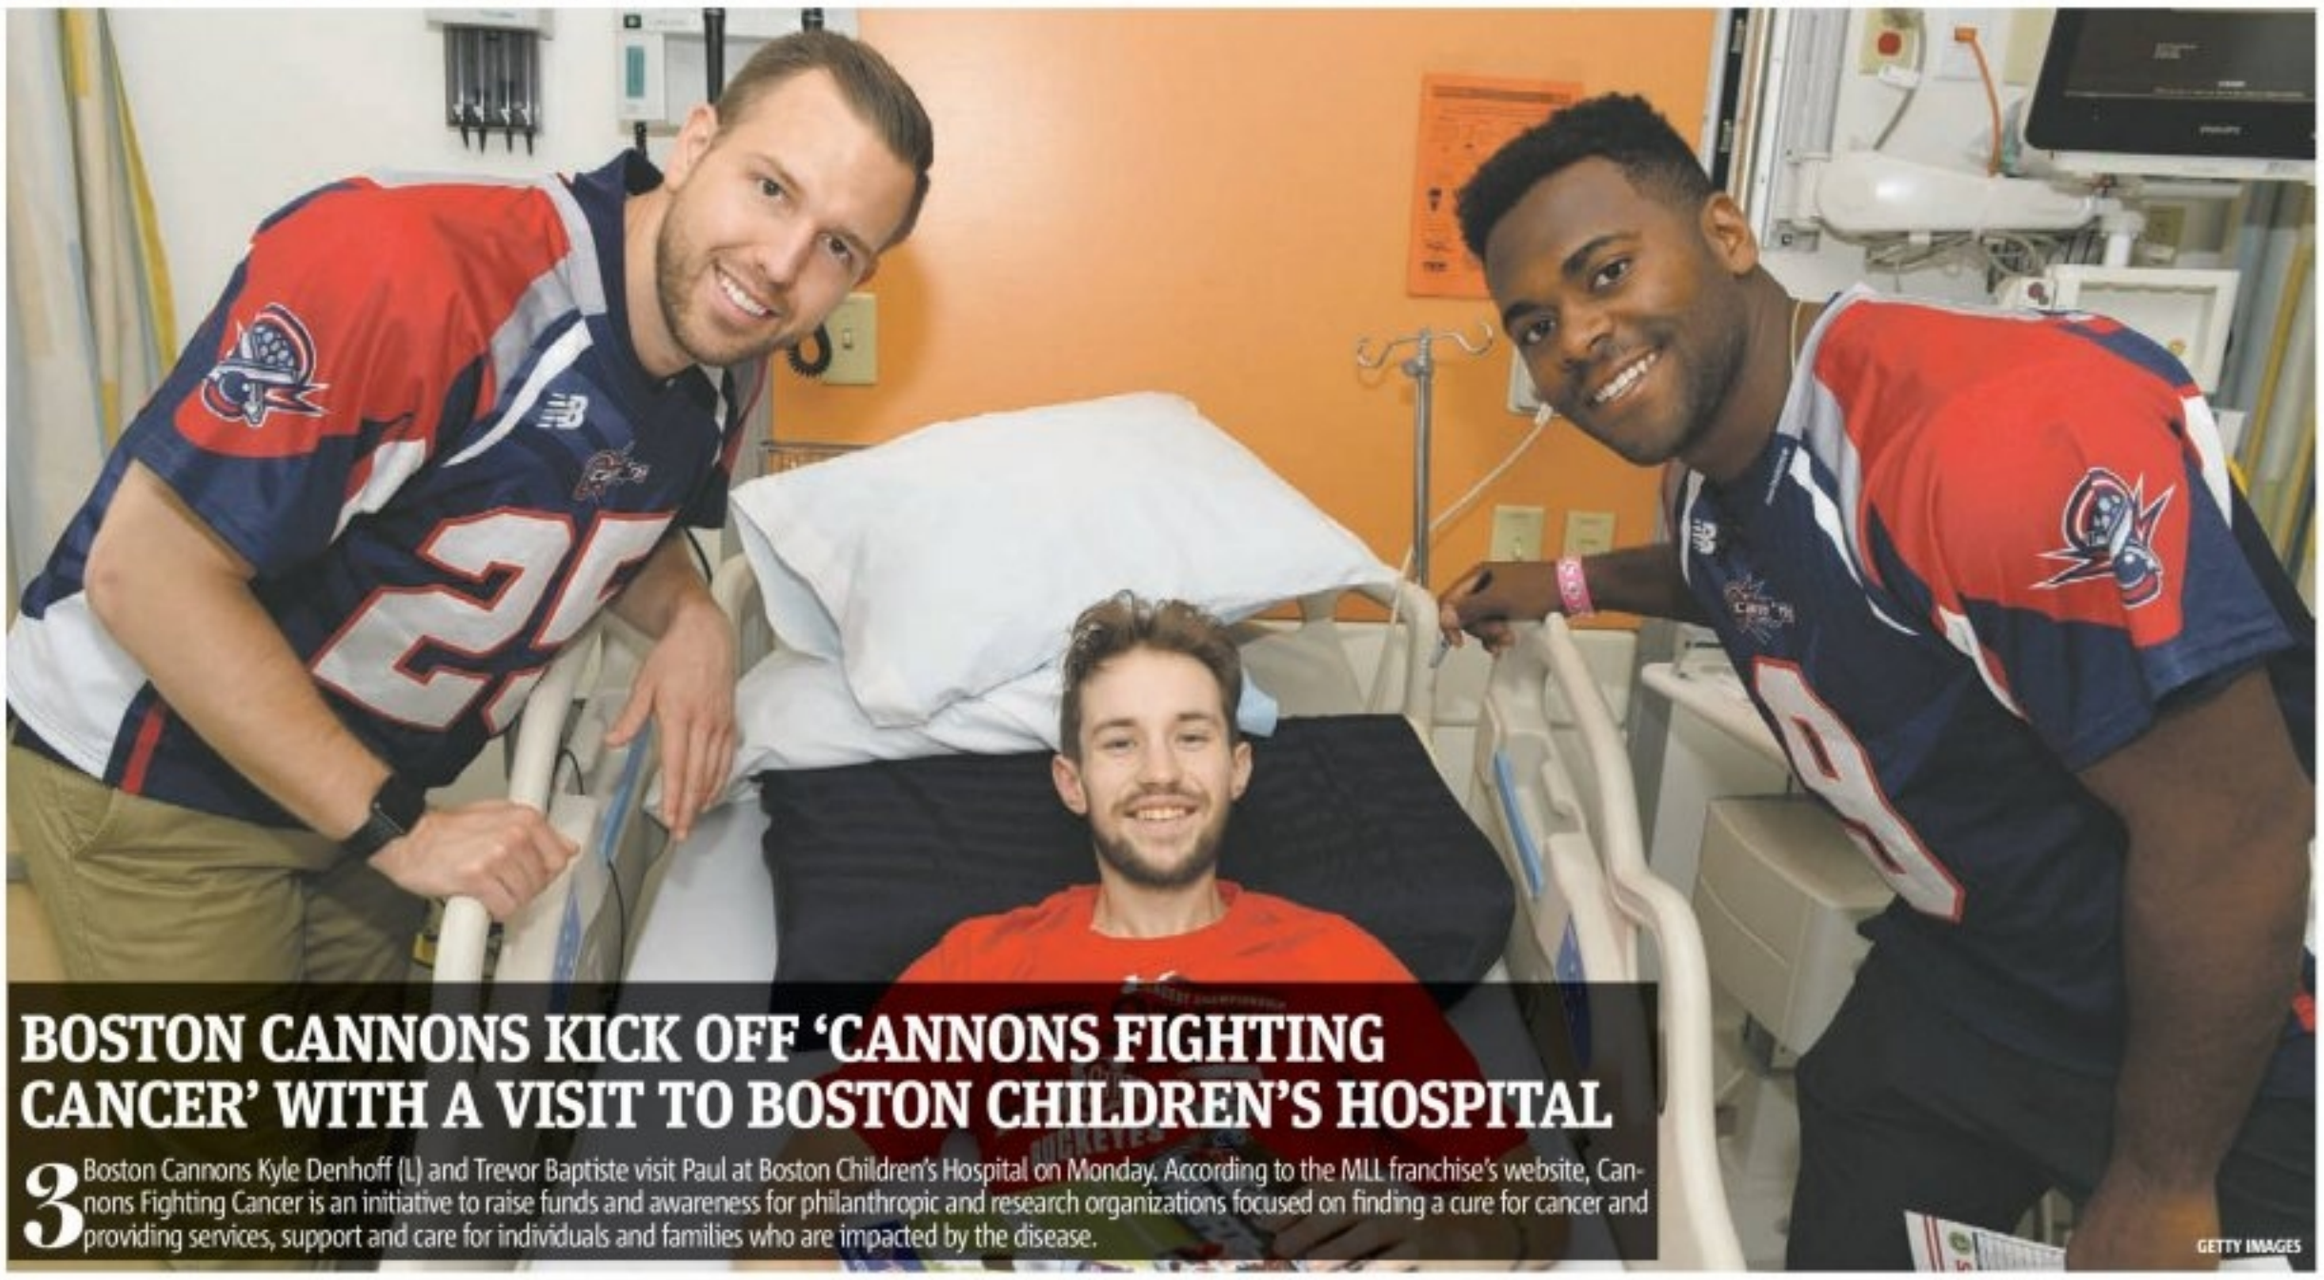
As expected, many fans came away from the "Westworld" Season 2 finale with more questions than answers. All the shocking twists and turns are par for the course on HBO's hit sci-fi series, but nobody could've seen that surprise post-credits scene coming. While we'll have to wait a bit for season three, that means we have plenty of time to comb through all those fan theories and rewatch every episode in order to predict what's next for Bernard, Dolores and the Man in Black.

BPS SUPERINTENDENT CHANG STEPS DOWN

1 Boston Public Schools Superintendent Tommy Chang resigned on Friday, two years before his contract was set to expire. This comes on the heels of a 2017 audit found that BPS used student activity accounts to pay employees under the table without reporting the income to the Internal Revenue Service. BPS was also sued last week, the Boston Globe reported, by civil rights and student advocacy groups over the school system's failure to disclose whether or not it was handing over student information to Immigration and Customs Enforcement officials. On Monday, Chang responded to this in a letter to the school community. "I'm taking the unusual step of speaking on a lawsuit we have not officially received yet because I want you to know how strongly we, as an organization, and I personally, as an educator and an immigrant, feel about protecting immigrant children," Chang wrote. "The allegation that has been made in news reports is that the Boston Public Schools (BPS) shared information with federal Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) that led to the arrest of a student. That claim is false." KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

TRUMP, WATERS CLASH ON IMMIGRATION POLICY

2 President Donald Trump lashed out on Monday at a Democratic congresswoman who urged Americans to confront members of Trump's inner circle in public places as tensions rose over the Republican president's hardline immigration policy. Trump faced a global outcry this month, including criticism from some in his own party, over migrant children separated from their parents by U.S. authorities under the administration's policy of seeking to detain and prosecute adults caught entering the country illegally. The president retreated on Wednesday, ordering an end to the family separations at the U.S.-Mexico border, but leaving his two-month-old "zero tolerance" policy in place. That raised questions about where to house families detained at the border and how to process them speedily. The government has yet to reunite more than 2,000 children with their parents. Democratic Rep. Maxine Waters told a crowd in her home state of California on Sunday that a Virginia restaurant's refusal on Friday to serve White House press secretary Sarah Sanders should be a model for resisting Trump.



BOSTON CANNONS KICK OFF 'CANNONS FIGHTING CANCER' WITH A VISIT TO BOSTON CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL

HARLEY TO MOVE SOME PRODUCTION OUT OF US

4 Harley-Davidson Inc. said on Monday it would move U.S. production of motorcycles for European Union customers overseas to avoid retaliatory tariffs that could cost the company up to $100 million per year. Harley shares plunged as much as 7 percent and analysts cut their profit forecasts on concerns about how quickly the company would be able to adapt to the 25 percent import duties the European Union began charging on June 22. President Donald Trump has held up Harley as an example of a manufacturer that would benefit from his policies. But the proposed production shift appeared to mark an unintended consequence of U.S. tariffs imposed on European steel and aluminum earlier this month. "We think Harley's decision to protect EU demand is wise for the long-term health of the market," Baird Equity Research said in a note. "But we expect the near-term impact to weigh on estimates and sentiment until a clearer path to mitigation is outlined."

COURT DENIES 'MAKING A MURDERER' CASE APPEAL

5 The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday refused to hear a Wisconsin man's challenge to his conviction in a 2005 murder in which he said police coerced him into confessing, a case featured in a Netflix documentary series called "Making a Murderer." The justices turned away Brendan Dassey's appeal of a lower court ruling upholding his conviction for murder, sexual assault and mutilation of a corpse in the death of a freelance photographer named Teresa Halbach. Dassey, 16 years old at the time of the murder and now 28, told police officers who interrogated him four times in 48 hours that he had helped his uncle, Steven Avery, rape and kill Halbach. Dassey's lawyers have said he has "significant intellectual and social limitations" and was coerced into confessing in violation of his constitutional rights. Dassey and Avery were convicted of the murder in separate trials. Avery is now 55. Both men are in prison in Wisconsin. Dassey's attorney, Laura Nirider, said she would continue to fight to free her client.

US Attorney investigating sexual assault allegations against Baker's son

Gov. Charlie Baker's son, A.J., has been accused of groping a female passenger on a recent flight from D.C. to Boston.

The U.S. Attorney's office is reviewing allegations that Gov. Charlie Baker's son, A.J., groped a woman on a plane last week, and state authorities are not involved, the governor said Monday morning.

Speaking briefly to reporters in his office lobby, Baker did not discuss details of the allegations, which he said involved "a plane trip and my son A.J. last week." He said A.J. would cooperate "with any review of the matter."

"Look, I love my son, but this review needs to be done by the U.S. Attorney's Office," Baker said. "A.J. needs to cooperate, and we expect that that's what's going to happen."

WBZ-TV reported on Friday night that a woman aboard a JetBlue flight from Washington, D.C., to Boston on June 20 told state police that A.J. Baker groped her breast and refused to stop touching her. Police took him off the plane and he was not arrested nor summoned to appear in court, the TV station reported.

"My family and I expect a thorough review to take place," Baker said Monday. "We also expect the review will be fair and completely independent from this office."

Baker declined to relay what his son told him happened on the plane, saying "That's personal," and citing the ongoing review by federal authorities. Asked if he assumed A.J. would be cleared, he said, "There's an independent inquiry going on here, folks, and that's as it should be."

Baker said he expects his son to cooperate with authorities. STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

"We also expect the review will be fair and completely independent from this office."
Gov. Charlie Baker

Scott Lively, a conservative pastor challenging Baker for the GOP nomination for governor, said on Herald Radio on Monday that he generally believes the behavior of candidates' relatives "should be off-limits," but that he wants the investigation to also look at "how this incident managed to escape public scrutiny until Friday night" and why no charges were filed.

"The problem here is that it was initially handled by a law enforcement agency, the Massachusetts State Police, that's immersed in a raging public scandal involving police cover-ups to protect political elites, and this agency didn't charge the suspect," Lively said. "And the question is, would any other person in Massachusetts who faced these allegations be greeted at the plane by police in this particular way, or is this an example of favoritism?"

News of the allegations against A.J. Baker come less than three months after Bryon Hefner, the husband of former Senate President Stanley Rosenberg, was indicted on felony charges of sexual assault and other offenses.

"When the story originally broke about the Senate president's husband, my statement on it at the time was that there needs to be an independent review," Baker said, when asked about potential parallels with the Hefner case and calls for transparency. "There is an independent review going on here. It's being led by the U.S. Attorney's Office, and A.J. will cooperate with it, and we fully support that."

No charges have been filed against A.J., who is represented by Goodwin Procter attorney Roberto Braceras, according to Baker's office.

Braceras is vice chair of the Judicial Nominating Commission Baker formed in February 2015 to screen applicants for judgeships, and he served on the Supreme Judicial Court Nominating Commission Baker established in 2016 to consider candidates for the state's high court.

The fight against elder financial abuse

The Cooperative Credit Union Association is on the front lines combatting this rapidly growing trend.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Our older relatives deserve better. ISTOCK

Last March, lawmakers passed the controversial Financial Reform Bill. Both sides of the aisle had their issues with the bill itself — Democrats thought it gave big banks too much of a pass, and Republicans thought it did not provide enough freedom to the finance world. But one thing everyone could agree on was to include in the bill the small provision known as the Senior Safe Act, which allows banks and credit unions to investigate cases of suspected elder financial abuse.

A recent study performed by True Link Financial found that senior citizens lose nearly $37 billion a year as a result of financial scams. In the past, banks and credit unions were reluctant to aggressively investigate suspicious activity because of the many liability issues they could face. In many cases, such financial abuse is perpetrated by family members who gain access to their ailing relative's accounts and choose to run rampant. But now with the passing of this bill, tellers and financial services employees have the authority to step in if they sense foul play.

How to prevent elder financial fraud

Noting the provisions in the Senior Safe Act, some leaders in the financial services industry are stepping up to prevent elder financial fraud from happening on as wide a scale as it did in the past. The Cooperative Credit Union Association (CCUA), a trade organization serving the needs of its member credit unions throughout the Northeast, is one organization making such an effort. Just recently, CCUA has introduced a new online educational resource called CU Senior Safeguard that not only aims to train and certify tellers on the front line to spot and investigate any form of senior abuse right away, but also to educate all consumers about financial abuse.

"Elder financial abuse is unfortunately prevalent in a big way in our country," explains CCUA President and CEO Paul Gentile. "We did a survey and found that about 70 percent of elders are targeted in some way for some sort of elder financial abuse. A lot of elder abuse is widely unreported and the reason why is that a lot of it tends to happen on the family side. We believe about more than half of elder financial abuse originates with a family member."

CCUA President and CEO Paul Gentile. CCUA

Member credit unions of CCUA are training their employees to take note of any large withdrawals made by senior citizens or requests for joint accounts made by family members. This is not to say that all family members who are requesting this kind of access are planning on completely wiping out their relative's account. But the evidence is clear and must be taken seriously.

However, having a trusted member of the family to manage an ailing relative's account can be a great thing. And by educating yourself through CCUA's online CU Senior Safeguard program, you can more readily spot the potential threats from financial con artists.

"The elderly are very vulnerable to scams," says Gentile, explaining that cold calls from scam artists contribute to another large portion of elder financial abuse. "They tend to just be more willing to listen to things and get taken advantage of than younger people. Maybe it's loneliness or their generation was more trusting."

As of this week, CU Senior Safeguard has trained and certified more than 2,000 front-line tellers throughout New England to recognize the signs of this financial epidemic. In addition, its consumer-friendly online educational program is being offered at no cost to anyone who wants to join the fight to protect their loved ones from financial scams and abuse.

‘Westworld’ season 2 finale promises wilder season 3

Watch out for spoilers, unless you're still confused.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

The season 2 finale set up a wild, new world for season 3. ALL PHOTOS JOHN P. JOHNSON/HBO

Thanks to the Marvel Cinematic Universe, post-credits scenes have become all the rage at the movies. Television is no different, especially when it comes to popular, mind-bending shows like HBO's "Westworld."

The second season finale, "The Passenger," aired on Sunday, and audiences hoping for at least some closure to the many confusing twists and turns were left with few solutions. In fact, for those following along since the season 1 premiere in 2016, showrunners Jonathan Nolan and Lisa Joy left far more questions than they did answers. This includes the aforementioned post-credits stinger.

Featuring the ominous Man in Black, William (Ed Harris), and the estranged daughter he supposedly killed in a previous episode, Emily (Katja Herbers), the scene added yet another twist to the former's true nature. Namely, whether he is a human or an android — or in the show's parlance, a guest or a host. The story earlier revealed William's father-in-law, James Delos (Peter Mullan), had purchased the park and the technology behind it in order to prolong his own life. Further testing following his death demonstrated the limits of immortality, but as Sunday's final stinger hinted, Emily and William may have found success in the latter's case.

Then again, "Westworld" audiences can't be too sure. The seemingly indestructible Man in Black may be a human-cum-android hoping to extend his time, a battered and broken person being fooled once again, or neither. Maybe Nolan and Joy have something else in mind for the series' villainous figure, or maybe they don't. After all, though "Westworld" was renewed for a third season by HBO back in May, there's no telling when that season's first episode will see the light of day.

The same goes for the rest of the park's survivors, human and otherwise. Ashley Stubbs (Luke Hemsworth), the head of security, remains steadfast in his dedication to making sure all the surviving guests make it out alive. Meanwhile, his focus blinds him to the fact that Charlotte Hale (Tessa Thompson) is dead, and the woman he just let go to the mainland is in fact a resurrected Dolores Abernathy (Evan Rachel Wood) hell-bent on preserving the hosts' at the cost of humanity's livelihood.

Dolores in turn revives Bernard Lowe (Jeffrey Wright), whose fractured consciousness and memory has made parsing all of season 2's many time jumps as intriguing as it is frustrating. Much like the later seasons of "Lost," "Westworld" this season has presented its story in a format that is not for the faint of heart. The show's convoluted plot points and philosophical inquiries have increasingly made it less accessible. And yet, season 3 is indeed on the way.

What's next for the Man in Black?

So what should viewers expect when the next installment finally arrives? Between the Man in Black's confusing nature and the realization that several prominent hosts have escaped to the mainland, "Westworld" season 3 has a lot of promises to keep. Chief among them is answering the question, "How will a show about a theme park gone awry survive once it leaves the theme park behind?"

Speaking with The Hollywood Reporter, Joy offers a glimpse of what their answer might be. "It's going to be a whole new world," she says. "This series is about reinvention and scope. The first season was a more intimate look at the park from within the loops. In the second season, the hosts broke out of their loops and were able to explore more of the park. In the third season, they've broken out of the park itself. We're in terra incognita."

The executive producer also claims she and Nolan have been considering this option "as far back as the pilot." They "wanted to explore other worlds in the park" and "the one world we would start to see little glimpses of throughout the first two seasons was the real world." Sure enough, the latter — the world of the guests — has been previewed several times throughout "Westworld" season 2, and with Dolores and Bernard free to roam it, it seems season 3 will truly "be a whole new experience."

"Westworld" season 3 will premiere sometime in the hopefully not too distant future.

4 Artists & Trends on Instagram

The way of seeing beauty evolves very quickly on these social networks where brands no longer dictate what's in and out. These are the most striking trends and creators that change fashion, combine various techniques and aesthetics and show their work online, defying the established standards of beauty. Here's why they are all so coveted.

He has also collaborated with Nike, using human and animal morphology to create incredible embroidered pieces in which he explores the biological anatomy and aesthetic combinations that are created from cultural concepts. He has worked with artist Damien Hirst in the past and one could say that he is Leigh Bowery's successor when speaking of concept.

More than designers, these artists display their own body and morphology. Hannah Rose Dalton and Steven Raj Bhaskaran, of Montreal, created a new concept through prostheses, shoes and structures (which they also sell online) in which they show another vision of beauty without gender and without traditionally established "human" reference. They themselves have documented the reactions generated by this type of performance in their own physiognomies in various cities around the world, and with this they want to establish their critical position in the face of prevailing standards.

3 Players Bruins should target

NHL free agency starts next week and the B's should be players.

RICH SLATE
sports@metro.us

James Neal is one of the top names available in NHL free agency. GETTY IMAGES

It might not feel anything like hockey season with summer officially having started last Thursday, but rest-assured that with the NHL Draft just completed on Saturday and free agency set to begin on Sunday (basically a national holiday in Canada), the 2018-19 NHL season is not too far away.

The Bruins were one of the four finalists for the services of free agent left wing Ilya Kovalchuk but after a drawn-out process, they found out on Saturday that they had lost out to the Kings — who signed the Russian (who last played in the NHL in 2012-13) to a three-year deal with a cap hit of $6.25 million per year. He is 35 years old, so missing out on Kovalchuk might not be such a bad thing in the long run for the B's.

Boston's own potential big name free agent winger, Rick Nash (21 goals, 13 assists in 71 games last season), hasn't even committed to playing next season as he's said to be contemplating retirement. That is completely understandable considering he's suffered multiple concussions over the course of his NHL career, including one last spring after he was traded to the Bruins. Nash is 34, so it would make sense if the B's want to move on anyway since his production doesn't really match up with his potential salary ($8.2 million last year with a cap hit of $7.9 million) at this juncture.

Who is available?

Besides superstar center John Tavares (36 goals, 47 assists last season with the Islanders), it is far from a star-studded NHL free agent class for 2018 — meaning that there are very few names that will jump out at you unless you are a hardcore hockey fan. With that said, here are three players that the Bruins should do their due diligence on this week: James Neal, James van Riemsdyk and Jacob Trouba.

Neal and van Riemsdyk are both unrestricted free agents, while Trouba is restricted which makes things a little more complicated.

Neal had a nice first season with the Golden Knights, putting up 44 points in the regular season (25 goals, 19 assists) and 11 points (6 goals, 5 assists) in the playoffs as Vegas made an amazing run to the Stanley Cup Final vs. Washington. Neal is a proven veteran who can play either wing and has scored 25-plus goals five times in the NHL — including a career-high 40 with Pittsburgh in 2011-12.

Van Riemsdyk is only a year younger (29) than Neal but I feel like he still possesses more untapped potential. He only averaged 14:52 time on ice per game last season for Toronto but still managed to put up 54 points (36 goals, 18 assists) in the regular season. Going back to his days with the Flyers, he's always been a thorn in the side of Boston, and signing him away from the Leafs would also weaken what will soon be one of their fiercest rivals (see last spring's seven-game first round playoff series won by the Bruins where he had 3 goals and 1 assist).

Finally, Trouba held out from Winnipeg last year before agreeing to a short money deal (one-year, $3.5 million with a cap hit of $2.81 million). He played well for the Jets (3 goals, 21 assists, plus-9 and 21:53 time on ice in 55 regular season games then 2 goals and 1 assist in 17 playoff games) who reached the Western Conference Finals.

Twenty-four-year-old right-shot defensemen this affordable are rarely available so there's no doubt that he'll have many potential suitors contacting him.

Winger James Neal registered 44 points in 2017-18 with the Vegas Golden Knights, with 25 goals and 19 assists.

Monday at the 2018 World Cup

URUGUAY THUMP HOSTS, WIN GROUP A

Facing their first dangerous opponent at the World Cup, the hosts Russia were thoroughly outclassed by South American powers Uruguay in a 3-0 result.

Goals from Luis Suarez, Edinson Cavani and an own-goal from Denis Cheryshev saw Uruguay win Group A over Russia, which entered Monday morning level with the Sky Blue with six points after wins over Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

Uruguay will face the runner-up of Group B while Russia plays that group's winner, which will be either Spain or Portugal.

SAUDI ARABIA GRABS LAST-SECOND WINNER

Salem Aldawsari's 95th-minute goal gifted Saudi Arabia all three points in its final World Cup match against Egypt.

With both sides failing to qualify for the knockout stages, it was only pride that was on the line.

Egypt got off to a quick start as star striker Mohamed Salah scored his country's first World Cup goal in open play (non set piece) since 1934.

Salman Alfaraj drew Saudi Arabia level with a penalty in the sixth minute of first-half stoppage time.

URUGUAY THUMP HOSTS, WIN GROUP A

It wasn't pretty, but Spain came back from two one-goal deficits to clinch Group B with a 2-2 draw to Morocco.

Iago Aspas' stoppage time equalizer, which was originally called offsides and overturned due to VAR, salvaged a point for Spain, who are not looking like the team tabbed by many to win the tournament two weeks ago.

Isco answered Khalid Boutaib's opener within five minutes before two goals in the final 10 minutes.

Spain will face Russia in the Round of 16.

URUGUAY THUMP HOSTS, WIN GROUP A

A chippy affair saw Cristiano Ronaldo's Portugal lose its grip on Group B in stoppage time when a VAR review gifted Iran a late penalty on a controversial handball call.

Portugal looked in the driver's seat after Ricardo Quaresma put his side in front just before halftime. Ronaldo had a chance to clinch all three points in the 53rd minute, but saw his penalty saved.

Instead of playing a weaker Russia side now, Portugal will have to face South American powers Uruguay.

Aries Get involved in activities that will challenge you physically. Personal contracts or settlements can be drawn up and signed. Romance should be on your mind and plans should be formulated.

Taurus You may desire change, but acting prematurely is discouraged. Dig deep and discover the ins and outs of a deal before you sign up. Poor physical choices are apparent.

Gemini Consider the consequences before you make an unrealistic promise. Stay ahead by focusing on the best way to use your skills to promote yourself, not someone else. Personal improvements are favored.

Cancer Don't hesitate to make a change if it will stabilize your life. Your reluctance to accept the inevitable will cause you to be left behind. Get moving.

Leo Simplify your life. Concentrate on personal growth, integrity and taking care of unfinished business. Make plans with a loved one or start a new exercise and fitness regimen.

Virgo Don't hesitate to carry out changes that will encourage you to learn, explore and expand your interests and skills. Embrace an opportunity to connect to people who can help you get ahead.

Libra Look past what's right in front of you. Don't allow negativity to seep into your outlook or deter you from doing what you want to do. Put your energy into personal growth.

Scorpio Think before you act. Consider all sides of a situation before you make assumptions or place blame. Anger is not the answer. Consider what is fair and in everyone's best interest.

Sagittarius You've got the right idea, but you may not be collaborating with the right person. Look for signs of insincerity that could indicate problems ahead.

Capricorn Bring about change. Your experience will help you figure out what to do next. Don't give in to someone trying to get you to spend money or take on too much.

Aquarius Disregard any invitation to be indulgent. Think and do for yourself, and avoid becoming beholden to someone who doesn't play fair. Put your energy into positive personal change.

Pisces Evaluate your financial situation before you make a donation or offer a loan to a friend. If you invest wisely, your assets will grow. Act on facts, not on someone's hard-luck story. EUGENIA LAST
